This six month-old baby boy has no history of systemic diseases or congenital anomalies. Currently, he has cough with non-purulent sputum for three days. The cough was so severe that vomiting would follow thereafter, but no spontaneous vomiting was noted. Hoarseness, stridor and barking cough have been observed since the yesterday afternoon. No other symptoms such as diarrhea were observed. No other family members had the similar symptoms recently. He was brought to LMD twice for help but with no improvement. His appetite and activity were both decreased during this period. Thus, he was taken to our ER for help.
